Fawcett Notes:

Most Fawcett titles, including Bulletman, Captain Marvel, Captain Marvel Jr., Captain Midnight, Marvel Family, Mary Marvel, Minuteman, and Spy Smasher were complete books featuring only the title character in two or more stories. In other books usually one story per character was the rule.
Fawcett also published a seven issue title in 1940, Slam Bang Comics, which had no costume or super heroes, only adventure stories. This company also issued a series of giant titles running to the late 40's which included Gift, Holiday, and Xmas comics. These were merely several Fawcett comics stapled together to make one giant issue, and contained no original material other than the covers.
All Hero and America's Greatest were both large-size, 15¢ comics, while Nickle was only half-size, about the size of a modern comic, and like the title indicates sold for a mere nickle.
Whiz Comics actually began with #2, but Fawcett made up for this by publishing two #5 Issues. The first six issues of Master were large, oversized numbers.

Fiction House Notes:
Fiction House comics were primarily adventure story publications but are listed here because the few costumed heroes published by this firm were of better than average quality in both story and art. For this reason only issues with costume hero contents and cover features have been cited here.
Two Fiction House issues, Jumbo #14 and Rangers of Freedom #5, featured costumed characters on the covers but not inside.

Fight generally had war, spy, and soldier of fortune stories, while Rangers and Wings were mostly composed of war stories of the past and present, with emphasis on air tales in Wings.
Jumbo featured two long running characters, Sheena queen of the Jungle, and Hawk of the Seas, in addition to other miscellaneous tales, while Jungle Comics was just that.
Planet was an all science fiction comic which had regular features and characters through most of its publishing history.

MLJ Notes:
Most MLJ comics had one story per character with a few exemptions such as Zip #47, which featured Steel Sterling and Red Rube in two stories each. However, Shield-Wizard and Black Hood (Hangman) had three or more stories per featured character in most cases.
MLJ stories were frequently reprinted in such comics as Roly Poly, Liberty, and Black Swan. Pep Comics continued to publish after #64, but without any costume heroes.

Timely Notes:
The titles Captain America, Human Torch, and Sub-Mariner were actually published in two different series. The first series ended with Captain America #75, February 1950 (#74 and 75 were entitled Captain America's Weird Tales); Human Torch #35, March 1949; and Sub-Mariner #32, June 1949. Then, the second series included Captain America #76-78 (May, July, and September 1954); Sub-Mariner #33-42 (April 1954 to October 1955); and Human Torch #36-38 (May, Jane, and July 1954).

There is the possibility of the existence of Kid #11, but this is an extremely rare issue if it still exists.
Comedy #9 was actually a continuation of Daring Mystery-which stopped publication with #8, until it was revived again in 1944 with #9. Thus Comedy is treated as a separate title.
Amazing and Complete were the same title, while Miss America continued to publish after #2 but without any super heroes.
